To: The Walt Disney Company

We, The Undersigned, believe that your company's policy of ending shows at 65 episodes irregardless of the shows popularity is both unfair to the fans and a bad business move to the company. The goal of any media company is to get people to watch their programming, so shows that have high ratings should be kept in production until the people decide they've had enough, at which point the ratings will decline. In addition, popular shows with new episodes are much more able to hold viewers interest and to sell merchandise. Lilo and Stitch: The Series is such a show that needs to be renewed, both for the fans and the company.

Thank you,
The Undersigned
